

Abstract:

A payment system for a distributed computer network such as the Internet. A merchant or vending computer contains promotional information which is communicated to a customer's computer. Order/payment information is communicated to a payment processing computer which automatically contacts a bank for verification. In some embodiments a password is sent to the customer's computer, thereby allowing the customer computer to gain access to restricted data on the merchant computer.